CABLE CAR FACTS

Invented in San Francisco, the cable cars have been operating here since Andrew Hallidie first ran his creation down the Clay Street hill in 1873.

Once a form of transportation used in cities around the world, the San Francisco cable cars are the last in daily revenue service. They were made a National Historic Landmark in 1964.

The cable cars travel at a steady 9 1/2 miles per hour when they grip the steel cable that runs beneath the street.

Double ended cable cars run only on California Street and the smaller single ended cars run on the Powell-Mason and Powell-Hyde lines.

The cable car barn at Washington and Mason houses the cable car museum and the machinery that moves the cable.
